I N T R O D U C T I O N

First of all, I wish to thank all those whose kind cooperation made this genealogy possible.

This genealogy, as to names and dates, is as accurate as the information I have been supplied by the various people or other sources from which data was obtained. Some of the sources of information, other than individuals, were Hans Herr Genealogy; some records from Lancaster Co. Historical Society; and gravestones in Mt. Eden Lutheran, Zion Reformed and Quarryville cemeteries.

I have attempted to arrange this genealogy in such a manner as to make it easy to locate where each individual listed in the index fits in their respective family groups as well as their descent from Christian Keen and Sophia Althouse. In the genealogical listing each family group is indicated by a letter as shown on first page of this listing. In succeeding pages each family group is indicated by a group of letters in the family heading and each child of that group by a letter preceding their name. The group of letters following each persons name in the index indicates where they fit in the genealogical listing. An example follows:

Keen, Amy - IHD "I" indicates Christian Keen, the ninth child of Henry Keehn. "H" indicates John R. Keen the eighth child of Christian Keen. "D" indicates the fourth child of John R. Keen.

This indexing may appear a bit complex at first but with use it becomes easy.

In conclusion, it may be stated, that the value of this Genealogy will increase as time passes because the sources from which the information was obtained will no longer be available. This book will remain as a record to clear any doubts for succeeding generations as to their background.

"FIGHTING CLAN" OF KEENS OWNED HISTORIC PLANT

Many Famous Characters In Local History Engaged In Whiskey Trade In Early Days

CIVIL WAR MARKED START OF THE END

Tucked away in the hill land northeast of Quarryville, approachable only by almost impossible roads that only the more domestic cars will attempt, is this farm of Peter and Henry Keen.

The land possessed by these two aged husbandmen, who carry in their veins the blood of Fighting Mad Anthony Wayne, covers 150 acres, now largely unused. A farm that was once the pride of the lower end has "gone to seed" and the two owners are hard pressed to keep working the little stretches that they do.

In these once fertile fields there grew vast crops of corn and rye, crops that were so large they could not be marketed profitably. And so Christian Keen took to liquor and built himself a fine still house, which stands today, where he used the surplus crops in the manufacture of a fine grade of whiskey. Another still, house that stood nearer a little cemetery that contains the bones of Bellsteins and Keens, is now extinct.

The whiskey trade flourished on this ancient farm in the balmy days of the Civil War, when men were men and could drink their liquor. Perhaps it was the quality of the whiskey or perhaps it was the reincarnation of Mad Anthony Wayne but it has been said that Christian Keen would come out of his hilliness at election time, in a brilliant red flannel shirt, the scourge of all voters and control the polls of Quarryville.

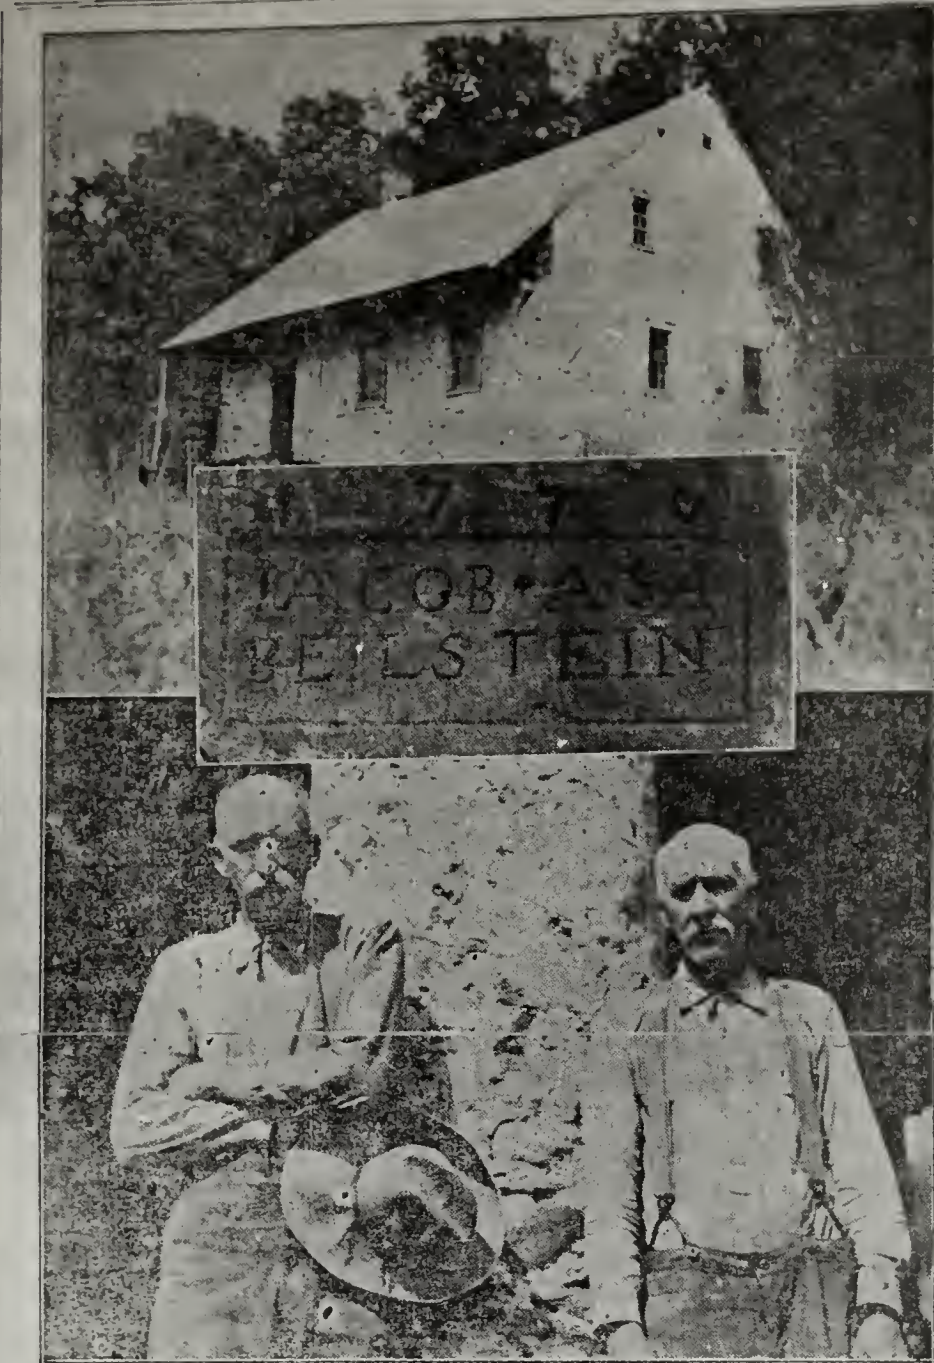

A Fighting Family
The earliest records have marked the Keens as a fighting family. The old farm was first settled by Henri Keen at the close of the Revolutionary war. He came to Lancaster from Montgomery, where he was known as a powerful figure. His wife was a niece of Anthony Wayne.

He had a number of children, among them being Christian and Samuel. Another son, Harry, became a wagon maker and later became a burning lime in the neighborhood of Quarryville at a very early age. The father, Henri, was a member of the German Reformed church and it was through his efforts and under his guiding hand that the congregation at New Providence was formed. This church is known as Zion's Reformed church.

House Built In 1770
The farm, however, antedates the Keen family. The earliest records indicate that it was owned by Jacob and Ann Bellstein. These gentlemen, in 1770 built a large farmhouse and barn and placed a cornerstone with their names and the date carved on it. This stone, the earliest record of the history of the farm, was later placed in the barn built on almost the same site by Christian Keen.

Little is known of the Bellsteins from where they came or more precisely who they were. They built the farm efficiently and it is said that they engaged in the liquor trade in the still house which has now completely disappeared. Their family was buried in a private cemetery on the property, traces of which can be seen today. A few stones are standing but time and the elements have defaced many records that may have been preserved there.

Stills Once Numerous
The history of the Keen family and the manufacture of the whiskey

The picture above shows the still house built by Christian Keen, which was used during the Civil War. In the center is the cornerstone of the barn erected by the Bellstein family dated, 1770. This cornerstone is now placed in the present barn, which was erected by Christian Keen, on almost the same site as the original. The lower picture shows the present owners of the farm, Henry and Baker Keen.

the life of the people in that earlier age. In times gone by at almost every mile and on nearly every farm, a still house, large or small could be found, producing whiskey from the excess crops of the farmers in the countryside.

No prohibition agents existed then to swoop down on the distillers. The trade was legitimate and an honorable one. The products of these Lancaster county stills were hauled to Philadelphia, to Wilmington and even as far west as Pittsburgh. Special Conestoga wagons were built to contain five hogheads having a capacity of 132 gallons each. The manufacture of the hogheads alone was a flourishing industry in this county.

So numerous were the stills in the county that it is said, from one point seven still houses could be pointed out to the observer.

The business was a romantic one and many famous characters engaged in it. The drivers of the six horse teams were a peculiar type and ever took great pride in their horses, engendering the fiercest rivalry.

The manufacture of whiskey in Pennsylvania and in other points, however, put a crimp in the industry here and shortly before the Civil War, a majority of the still houses had closed. In 1863, it is said that there were only two still houses in the lower end, that of Pat Reynolds, in Refton and the Keen distillery, in Edco township, which, we have said, was owned by Samuel Keen and his redoubtable red shirted brother, Christian.

Whiskey Era Passes
Of these two, Reynolds' still was to operate until some time in the seventies. The Civil War closed the doors of the Keen still.

One other factor may have contributed to the downfall of the whiskey business in this county. Even in the earliest days, it was the custom to collect a small tax for the operation of the stills. After the whiskey rebellion, the revenue was increased and soon became so excessive that many stills were out of business.

After the whiskey era, Christian Keen worked his farm and lived to a hale old age. His brother, Samuel moved to a farm south of Quarryville, now owned by Amos Gilbert. These two brothers possessed another farm near Quarryville, of 140 acres, which they sold to C. M. Heas, for the stupendous price of $150 an acre. This sale was considered one of the greatest made in that time. The land later became the property of Quarryville Land and Improvement Association and the greater part of the farm is built on it, at present.

The Keen farm, which is so ragged in these modern days, is located in the densest hinterland of Quarryville. The explorer must take only the worst roads, by innumerable twists and turns to débouch on the beautiful orchard that conceals the old home.

Several years ago, the woods about the farm became "haunted" and lower end folk who passed along the roadway, at night, were thrown into frightful stage of fear by a crashing that occurred in the woods and the sight of a large hulking object dashing between the trees. Poses were formed and offered a vigorous hunt, a steer was discovered roaming in the woods. The animal had strayed away as a calf and had become wild.

DUELS STILL FOUGHT IN ITALIAN ARMY

(By International News Service)
Washington.—Duels although officially forbidden in the Italian army, are indulged in by Italian army officers—and, in fact, officers, under-officers and men of other ranks are bound to accept challenges to a duel if a court of honor declares that it will take no steps to prevent such a contest, according to reports made to the Military Intelligence Division of the War Department by the American Military Attaché in Rome.

THE EARLY KEENS - An Historical Commentary
by Clair H. Keen

Our knowledge of the Keen family goes back to about 1776-77. At that time they lived in Montgomery or Bucks county just north of Philadelphia. When the British captured Philadelphia in 1776, the farmers near the city were fearful that foraging parties of British, who were quartered in the city, would seize their cattle, pigs and chickens for meat and their horses for use in drawing artillery and wagon trains.

After a good deal of thought and discussion within the family, it was decided to send the livestock to a safer place. Accordingly Henry Keen being a young man and single was selected to take charge and pilot the party. Others by the name of Keen must have been in the party because a Daniel Keen, who may have been a cousin or nephew of Henry Keen was born in 1796 and died in 1848. He is buried at New Providence. There was also a Washington Keen who lost an arm in the Civil War. A Henry Keen moved with his family from southern Lancaster County to Port Deposit, Maryland. He being a large man was known as "Big Hen Keen". The existence of these three other Keens is somewhat of a mystery. Who their parents were and where their parents came from is unknown. The writer believes the parent or parents of the three, namely Daniel, Washington and Henry came from the proximity of Philadelphia.

In any event Henry Keen marshalled his party and rounded up the farm livestock and herded them into the wilderness headed westward. The party kept moving until they arrived at what the writer knows as the Willis Jackson farm in southern Lancaster County (now or recently owned by a Mr. Graybill of Lititz, Pa.)

There is no record of Henry Keen ever having gone back to his people, even for a visit. However, we are not sure of that. There is, however, a story of some of his sons visiting an Albright family in Philadelphia along about 1830 to 1840. The writer's impression is that a sister of Henry Keen married an Albright. Mr. Albright was a contractor and he became quite wealthy. Christian was one of the party that made the trip. The Albright's lived in considerable style as befitted their standing in society. The Keen boys being crude farmers felt quite out of place amidst all this display of luxury. As a result they did not stay long but returned to their cruder but more congenial surroundings in southern Lancaster County, and never again went to visit the Albrights in Philadelphia.

Sophia Wayne now comes into the picture. At the time of the British capture of Philadelphia she was a young girl living there. While the farmers living outside the city were concerned about their livestock, those within the city were subjected to severe military rule. This was very irksome to many people. Among them was Sophia's father. He bade farewell to his friends and neighbors took little Sophia by the hand and like Henry Keen took a westerly course that eventually took them to New Providence in southern Lancaster County. They stopped with an Eckman family there. The Eckmans were farmers. Whether Sophia's father knew the Eckmans previously, we do not know, but the writer is of the opinion that he and the Eckmans were friends.

When the British evacuated Philadelphia in June 1778, Sophia's father returned to the city. The Eckmans with whom they had stayed, being childless and having become very much attached to Sophia wanted to keep her. After much persuasion, the father consented and with a heavy heart went back to Philadelphia alone. The writer believes Sophia's mother was dead. And this fact that the father consented to leave her with the Eckmans rather than take her to a motherless home in Philadelphia strengthens that belief.

Sophia grew up and busied herself with the problems and conditions that beset frontier life in that day. We know little about her general makeup but boys and girls of that day, the same as today have a way of getting into each others company. So of course there must be at least one love tale in this story. Henry Keen came to know Sophia Wayne. It appears that with each meeting he liked her more. Eventually he wooed her and finally won and wedded her and she became Sophia Wayne Keen. Tradition says she was a niece of General Anthony (Mad Anthony) Wayne of Revolutionary and Indian War fame. Following the wedding they moved to the Keen Homestead farm and remained there the remainder of their lives; Henry Keen died in 1839 and Sophia Wayne Keen in 1852. The writer's father was born in 1847, which was five years before his grandmother's death. He said he remembered her quite well. She was a rather small woman with a large mole on one cheek. She busied herself during the late summer and autumn in paring peaches and apples. These she would place on large drying boards exposed to the sun. When they were sufficiently dried she would put them in bags holding about two quarts, after which she placed them in a large wooden chest. Candy being a scarce item at that time, the little boys, Samuel and Elijah soon learned to beg for snitz. When she thought it was in order she would go to the chest and give each one a handful. The boys would then go about their play and eat the snitz.

Christian Keen, whose memory we honor today, was the 9th child of a total of eleven born to Henry Keen and Sophia Wayne Keen. It appears that all the other boys, six in number, of the family found wives and established homes but at the age of 40 Christian was still clinging to his father's fireside. However, about this time, there came into the community, a German emigrant family. The youngest girl of this family caught Christian's fancy. She was 20 years his junior but what of that, Christian pressed his suit with the result that Sophia Althouse became Sophia Althouse Keen.

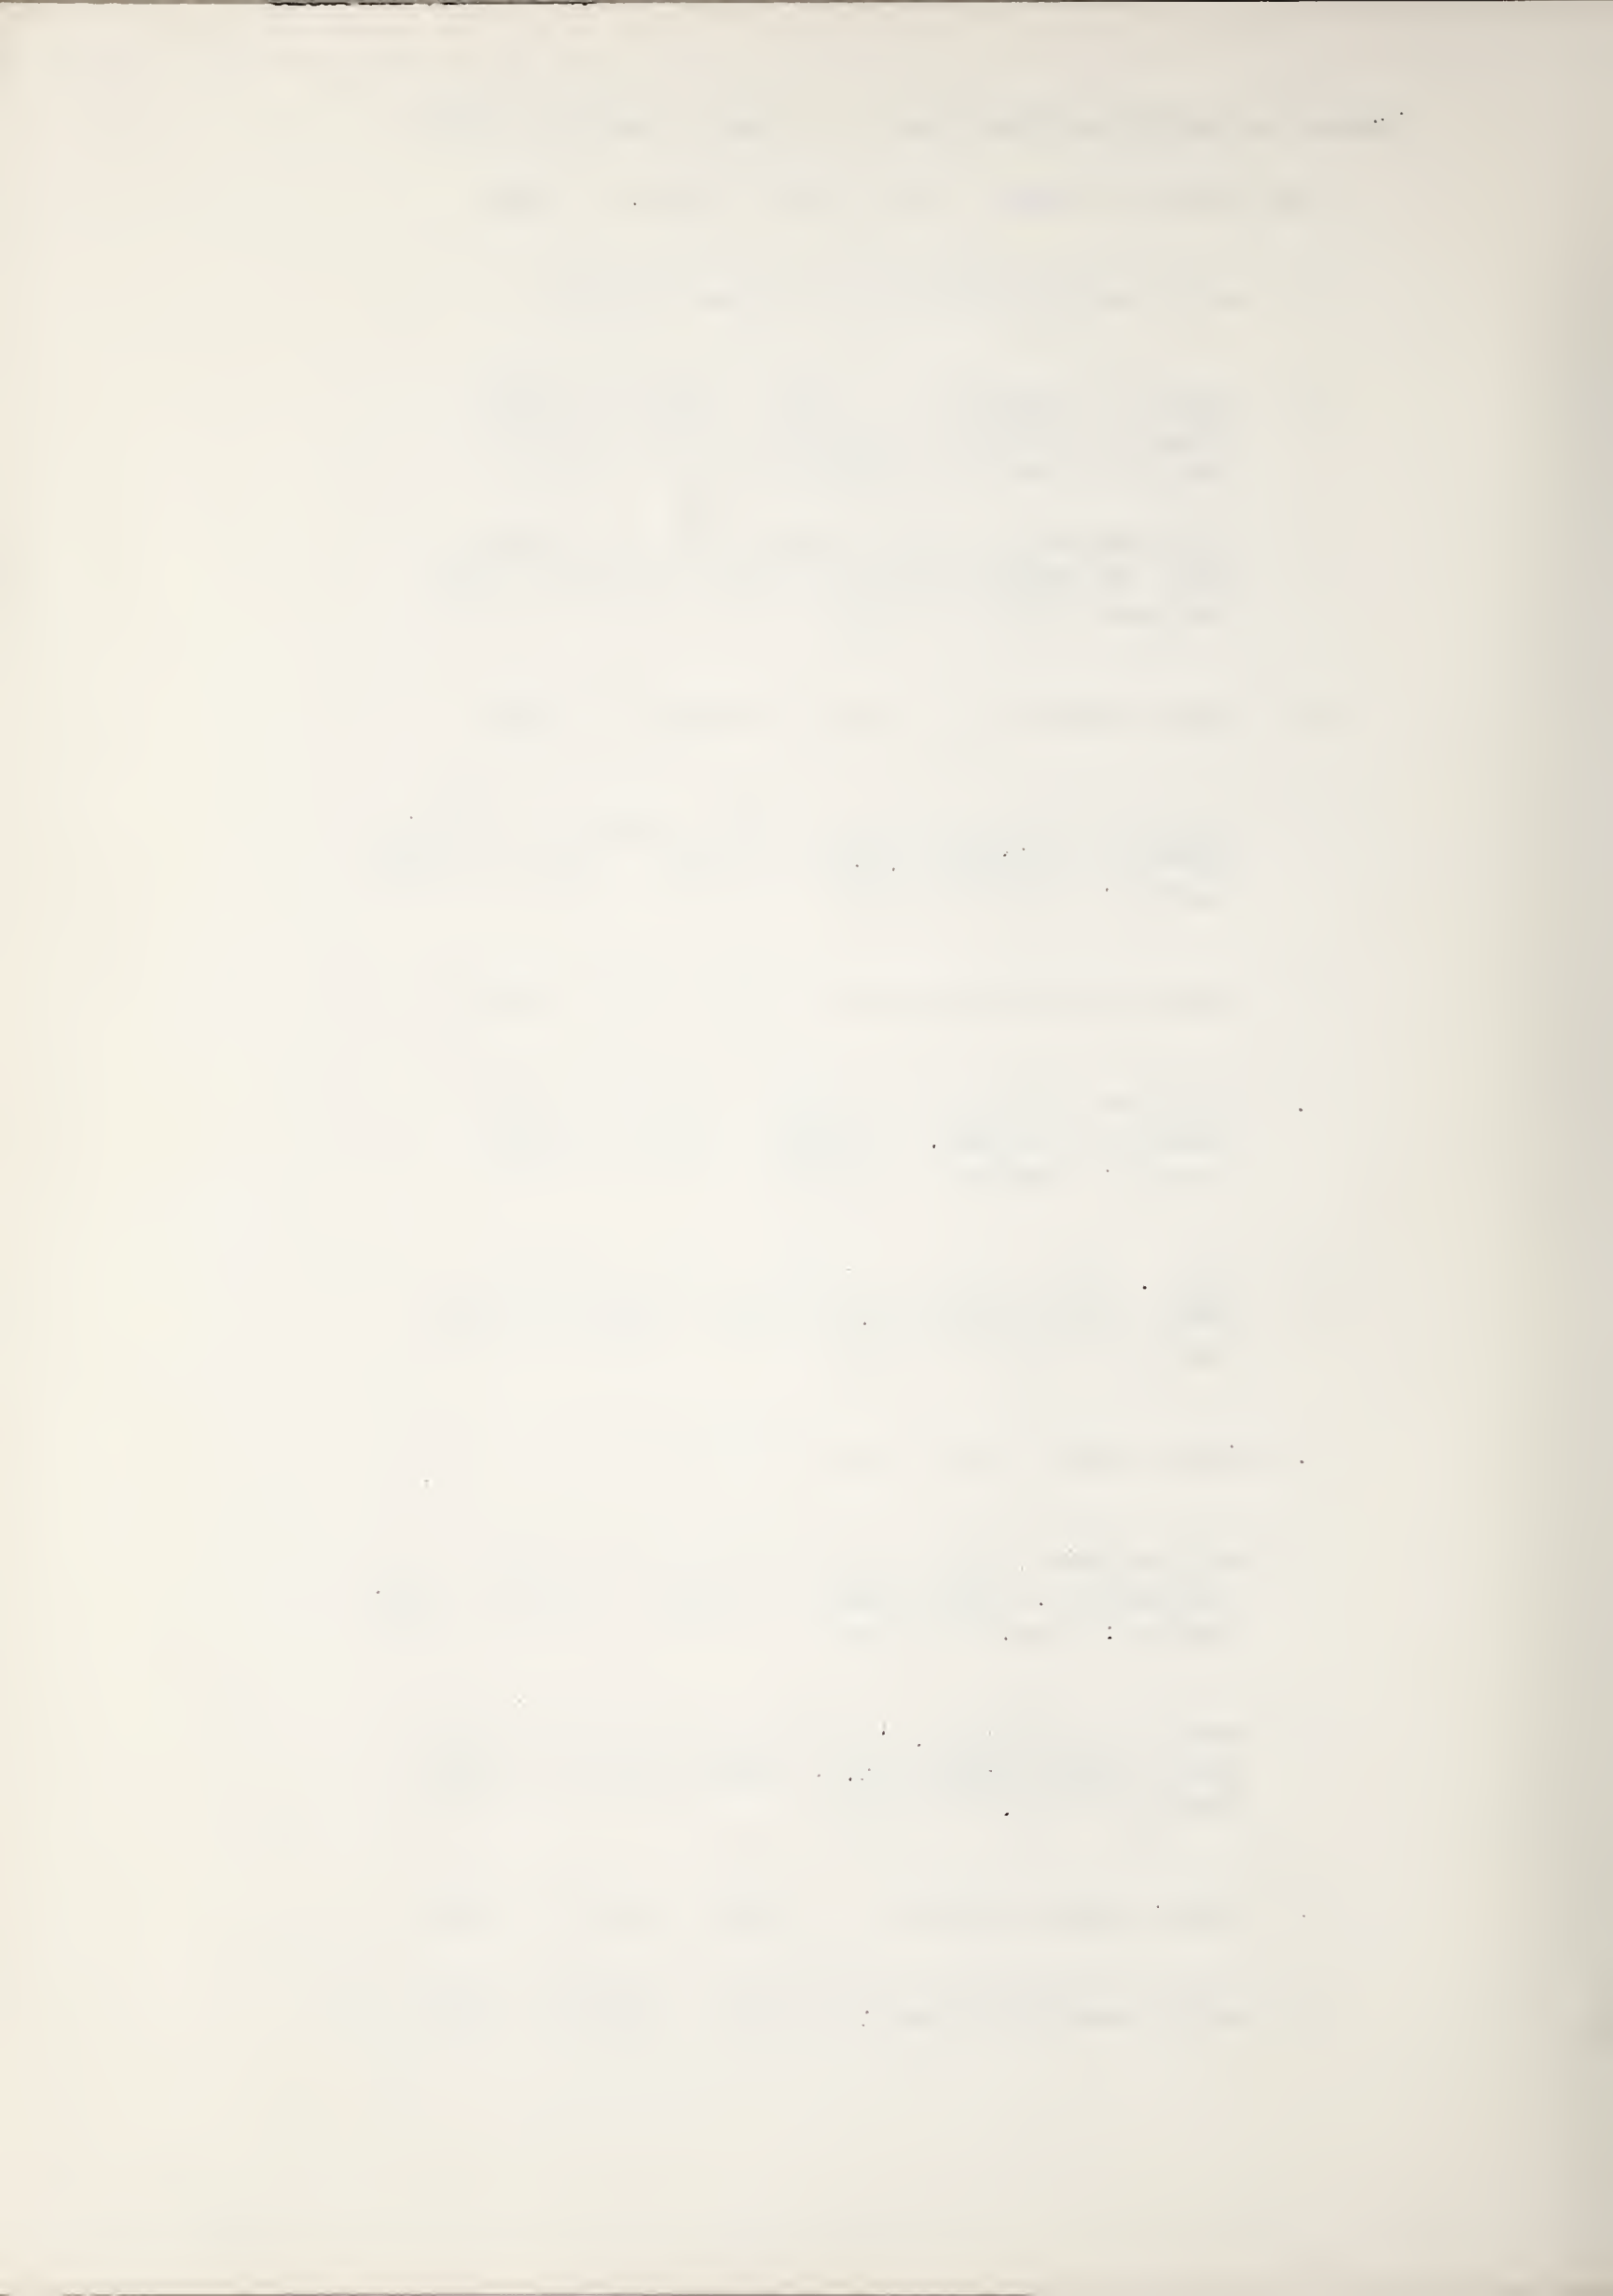

Sophia Althouse Keen was the youngest of 11 children born to George L. Althouse and Christiann Althouse. The family sailed from Hamburg, Germany in the ship Fortune on September 8, 1803, Caleb Earl being the captain's name. The passage was rough and slow, it taking about one barrel of flour to see the family safely across the Atlantic Ocean. One son, Amos, was left in Germany. Whether the family was too poor to bring him we do not know. The generally accepted thought is that he was left behind in a good home because of scarcity of funds. One son died and was buried at sea. They landed at Baltimore about 90 days after having set sail. Upon landing the father and mother bound themselves out in order to defray the expense of their passage. This act again leads us to believe that poverty compelled the parents to leave Amos in Germany. These periods of bondage usually lasted from 3 to 5 years. Parties who entered into such an agreement were strictly compelled by law to fulfill the terms and conditions set forth. When the period of bondage ended the parents moved from New Jersey where they were bound out and came to Pennsylvania and resided along Keen Road in Bart Township. One daughter Eliza was left in New Jersey when the family came to Pennsylvania and has been lost also in the great American melting pot.

This narrative covers the first two generations of Keens that we know about. The first is Henry Keehn, the founder of the Keen family in Lancaster County and the second Christian Keen, the branch we represent. Perhaps a continuation beginning with Christian Keen's children and later generations could be started at this point.

CHICAGO, ILL. 60637

DEAR PROFESSOR KATZ:
I have your letter of January 8, 1964, regarding the loan of the book "The Physics of Fluids" to the University of Chicago.

I am sorry that I cannot return the book to you at this time. The book is currently in the library of the Physics Department and is being used by several of our students. I will return the book to you as soon as it is available.

Very truly yours,
J. J. KATZ
